The Rise of Tom Hadley

By C. F. Whitman
CHAPTER XVI
A Concert

Maude and Betty seeing the necessity of having for the quartette a good variety of musical supplies, concluded that it would be best to get up a concert and charge an admission. Of course Charley had been heartily approved of the proposition, as did Mr. Benton, as might be expected, but principally because the young ladies had suggested it. But as Mr. Benton was accustomed to do, he consulted with Mr. Whitting and Justice Ransom about the matter as if ascertaining their views and assistance, and as usual to anything he proposed they gave their wholehearted assent and promised assistance to make the entertainment a success.

The four young people most concerned, however, got up the program and made arrangements—Maude, in this affair, looked to be as leader. The admission was put at thirty-five cents for adults and fifteen cents for children. Tickets were placed on sale at Clark's drug store a few days before the Friday evening on which the concert was to be held on Wednesday evening preceding, and were soon had been taken, and it was necessary to improve additional seats to meet the demand.

The members of the quartette were in the streets at the certainty of a full house and an appreciative audience, and the village magnate was seen on Friday afternoon near the post office, expressing his gratification to the village lawyer of the financial success of the entertainment. The real fact, however, was that Mr. Benton had done little towards it, except to buy two tickets—one for his wife and the other for himself, but Mr. Benton so good over the matter that he wanted to express his gratification to the quartette while in that mood Mr. Whitting happened along just in time to witness the benefit of Mr. Benton's exuberance of spirit.

VICTOR

MARY

After the town hall was never more crowded than on the evening of the entertainment. Bob Morton, Jim Gordon, Victor Whitting and Bert Clark were the ushers and under Bob's leadership, the great crowd was seated without confusion.

There had been some disagreement between the members of the quartette and Clarence Sydney, the pianist. Imagining that his playing was much the most prominent part of the entertainment, he desired that the piano music should be the principal feature of about every selection, while Maude, backed up by the other three members of the quartette, insisted that the instrumental music should be quite subordinate to the singing, for they didn't want the finest tones of the voices drowned out in a great volume of sound from the piano.

At one time this diversity of opinion produced serious results, but Betty proposed that Sydney have the first selection on the program as a piano solo, for she was satisfied, she said to Maude, that Sydney would so overcome his part that he would get to the end of the program, and that thereafter they would have no trouble from his playing, and this was assented to. Betty's scheme proved to perfection.

Sydney was delighted to have the first selection on the program and he meant to show an Alderburg audience that they had never heard such sounds as he could bring out of a piano and he accordingly, to several himself, swaying back and forth from side to side of the keyboard, in unison with his hands and fingers. At times under the manipulations of his fingers the piano did fairly astonish the audience.

The small boys on the front seats—wondering Sydney's performance at the end of six minutes or more, when the first song died away and he had turned around towards the audience for the first time, for they didn't care for another long period of affliction—felt such a gratification at its ending that they uttered an audible sigh of relief, whereat a general laugh followed. Sydney was rebuked beyond measure and satisfied in his own mind that even lighted Alderburg people lacked a proper appreciation of real instrumental music, concluded that what grace he could muster to conduct thereafter, his playing as the singers tested and their satisfaction at the success of Betty's ruse can well be imagined.

When the quartette appeared on the stage they were greeted with a general clapping of hands. They sang "Our Nether Hills". This selection, touched the hearts of the audience and the singers were loudly cheered. They responded with the first stanza of "Heavenly Highland Home". Again the singers were recalled and they sang the last stanza of this song.

The words and music of this splendid production were composed by Maude and Tom for the occasion. The elder Bentons were greatly affected for they knew the song referred to their own elegant home and it came to them as a great surprise as it was intended to be.

The next selection was "The Sweetest Song Ever Sung"—a duet by Charley and Betty, and for the first time they sang the last stanza of "Down by the Old Mill Stream".

The little drum corps, composed of Bob Morton, leader, Jim Gordon, Victor Whitting and Bert Clark gave an exhibition of their playing with the tenor drums. They were uproariously applauded—the youngsters in the audience making the loudest demonstrations of approval of the evening.

Miss Benton's solo, "Sing Me a Lullaby, Mother", with the other members of the quartette joining in the chorus, took the audience by storm. Of course they were recalled and then sang in the same manner, the last stanza of "My Lover is Over the Sea".

"Star of the Twilight" was thus rendered—first part of stanzas by Maude, the second part by Charley and the chorus by the full quartette. They were loudly cheered and "Do They Think of Me at Home?" was given in the same manner.

Tom and Maude, with their guitars, sang the college song: "A Quaker Sat in His Chamber Door" and in response for the encore gave: "Put Me Off at Buffalo". The youngsters in the audience called themselves hoarse over this selection.

The surprise of the evening was the appearance on the stage of the little drummers in a new role, assisted by the little misses, Bessie Hadley, Alice Marian, Weston, Mary Randolph and Katy Long. They had been secretly drilled for the occasion by Betty. They came on to the stage in pairs: Bob and Bessie, Jim and Alice Marian, Victor and Mary, and Bert and Katy. The boys filed off to the left in order and the girls to the right—the boys chanting the first line of a little melody thus:

"Oh we are a jolly set of fellows", and the girls chimed in with:

"Oh yes for they blow their own bells". A great shout of laughter and applause from the younger element in the audience drowned out the words of the next two lines, when coming around again in order they marched off the stage in couples as they had appeared. A tremendous clapping of hands followed, at which the young performers reappeared bowed or courtied, and retired as before.

There were several other selections, but the last on the program was "Don't You Remember?" by the quartette and responding to the encore, the last stanza of "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree" was sung. The last note of this beautiful song died away amid great applause and as the audience arose to leave the hall, many of the principal citizens were heard expressing their gratification at the great success of the entertainment.

Notwithstanding the lateness of the hour, Mr. and Mrs. Benton insisted that the singers should go home with them for a lunch. Mr. Benton was full of his praises and declared many times that he had never heard anything quite like it in all his life, and he hadn't even dreamed that such a fine concert could have been gotten up in the place and that too by his four children. He said that Betty was entitled to the greatest praise for drilling the eight young folks for the astonishing part they had taken in the entertainment.

After Charley had gone to take Betty and Tom home, Mr. Benton clasped his daughter to his heart saying: "Oh my little girl, you were the main spring of the whole performance. How splendidly you sing. I'm very proud of you."

"I'm so happy, father. I can't say more now," and she laid her head contentedly on his breast, while he gently stroked her hair as was his wont to show his tender affection for her.

Things were many echoes to the congratulations that the principal citizens had showered upon the quartette. The Advertiser fairly outdid itself in its commendations and declared editorially that the entertainment must be repeated. Charley was full of his praises of Betty. She was immensely pleased of course, but she was so extravagant, she felt like checking him up a bit. To his having said in one of his rapturous moods: "Oh Betty, you are a prodigy," she retorted:

"Just Charley. To think after we have lived so long in this little burg that you have just found it out. How much stock do you think I can take in your extravagant praise?"

"Don't dear, hush on that string any more. I'm awfully tired of it. There is no one who knows how to do things so well as my Betty."

"Just hold up there, Charley. I'm not yours yet, by considerable. I'm not quite certain that you won't be going wild and losing your head over someone else who happens to take your fancy."

"Oh Betty, you know better. If you didn't I'd forgive you. You have greatly improved since our school days and while you were away in Boston with your aunt, Alice, you have blossomed out to be the greatest beauty I know. Go look in the glass if you don't believe me. You warm hearted, dear, provoking, lovely Betty."

"Oh nonsense, Charley," (greatly pleased). "I look in the glass every day and I do up my hair and when I go out or expect company, and I don't see much of any change in my looks from my school days."

"Oh Betty, dear, but there is and you must know it. You will break my heart yet with your teasing."

"Well, well, Charley. Time will tell how constant you are."

Probably no two of the younger folks were more delighted with the parts they had taken than Mary and Victor. She praised him without stint for his fine drumming—declaring that none of the boys did so well and he was as profuse in his praises of her clear, sweet voice and charming ways.

Another echo—a little one—and the last to be here noted, was the talk between little Miss Weston and Jim. Alice Marian: "You drummed splendidly at the concert and sang well, too, and I am proud of you as our teacher is."

Jim: "Many thanks, little beauty, but did Miss Gardner say that?"

Alice Marian: "Yes, she did, and she also said that you was a fine smart boy. And what Miss Cora Gardner says is so and everybody says that, too."

Jim: "Oh, I'm so glad, Alice Marian. She is a wonder for a teacher. I hope that she will always have that opinion of me. She will be the teacher I'll think the best of, but I'll tell you, Alice Marian, in confidence, that your good opinion of me is like the biggest hill we can see from this place."

"Oh, but didn't we boys and girls do finely. Betty is splendid at training us. She can't be beat for that kind of an entertainment."

Jim: "That's just right. I never expected to have such good times when mother and I came here. I find lots here who are fine besides Tom. I think you and I shall stick to each other pretty closely in school and out."

Alice Marian: "I think we will, for you are so helpful when one like me is in need, and then we get our lessons so much better when we work together."

The demand for the concert to be repeated grew apace. This was taken as the greatest compliment that the quartette had received. Accordingly the entertainment was again given and to a full house as before.

With various variations—Clarence Sydney's solo was shortened and an additional number to the part taken by Betty's trained performers—the program was essentially the same as that of the first concert.

Some over two hundred and fifty dollars had been realized from both entertainments—a generous share went for the benefit of the drum corps.

Political Matters

By R. L. Cummings of West Paris

While listening to our Republican campaign speeches last night I was forcibly reminded of what Bill Bicknell said, when he was chairman of the latter that used to pack trains up over the Whitman creek above West Paris. When the engineer told Bill to look on, Bill asked: "How in thunder do you expect to make that grade without water?"

The principal speaker stated that he didn't propose to argue as argument did not make votes. So the force of the matter was simply an exhortation to get out the votes to keep us in power, because a defeat, or winning by a small majority would be considered a rebuke to the administration in State and Nation.

My impression is, however, that if Yankees have an argument or a chance to make people believe they have one they usually present it in the most favorable light. He finally said that this was proper when you present a matter to any court. Whereupon he proceeded to present his argument for continuance of the Republican campaign.

There were two of them. First, that the campaign promise of President Hoover was to call a special session of Congress to enact a "tariff" measure. I suppose that a large part of that audience knew that that statement was far from the fact. The special session was to be called to enact a measure for the relief of the farmers.

The second argument was that Wallace White was the father or at least the cause and responsible for our American Merchant Marine. This statement was only eight months ago when the American flag in an automobile was taken to have been near the salt water or the great lakes? About forty years ago J. P. Morgan & Co., the owners of the American Line purchased the Leyland Line. This line consisted of the vessels: Vancouver, Mongolian, Lancastrian, Devonian, Labrador, etc., did a large part of the export business from Portland and Montreal. Then this corporation being the second largest one in the world, Second only to the U. S. Steel Co. from the same source, purchased the White Star Line, The Dominion, The Red Star Line and the Hamburg American Line. These lines were capitalized in that manner so well known to our men of "high finance" and politics that I should be surprised if that speaker did not know of them. The White Star line was purchased at five times its original cost in cash and six times its cost in the stocks of the J. P. M. Co. for rates for carrying our goods to market jumped. The average rate for carrying farm products in 1910 was $2.69 per ton. In 1912, $6.72, and in 1914, $14.00 per ton. From that time on there was no limit to their charges.

Some men, outsiders of course, paid as high as $20.00 per ton to have goods carried to England. The farmer was restricted in the price he could receive for grain, his wool and his milk. These great corporations, although the shipboard, appointed by the President and full control of these rates, was allowed to charge whatever they saw fit. A. S. Franklin, the Vice President and General manager of the shipping trust, was a member of the shipping board.

What about the farmers of the west? The grow-ings as well grain? In the fall of 1914, when the war was on, live hogs were selling for 11c per pound. I know because I raised 200 that year. The price in England advanced 40 per cent, while the price here was cut to 5c per pound. The rate for carrying to England in cold storage was advanced from $7.00 per ton to $50.00 per ton, for that was not the worst feature. When application was made for space to ship they were confronted with the information that Swift & Company had no space engaged. So the packers were declared dividends of $25,000,000.00.

In 1919 The Cummings Esch bill, known as The Transportation act, was enacted, under the plea of turning the railroad back to private management that we might have lower rates and better service eventually. It also provided that these roads should be paid from the U. S. treasury a sum sufficient to make their dividends up to 5-12 to 6 per cent, until the Interstate Commerce Commission could institute rates that would return the amount. The deficit while the Government was putting these roads in condition to operate more efficiently was about $30,000,000.00 per month. When sold back in those efficient management hands they put the deficit up to over $100,000,000.00 per month as stated by Senator Robert M. La Follette.

The deplorable condition of agriculture throughout this country is a fact admitted by President Hoover and I have not heard it disputed by his most zealous supporters. Nevertheless, when the farmers, after having gone through such experiences as I have mentioned ask for a little bounty on goods exported, they are denounced as socialists and these gentlemen hold their hands in holy horror that they should ask for "Aid from our government".

With these facts before us it is little wonder that our candidate for Congress does not look impressive when he comes before an audience with his hands in his pockets and simply begs for votes and declares that he will support President Hoover against these disloyal Republicans and terrible Democrats that as our speaker illustrated have bound and gagged him.

O. E. S. Gave Dance—Children's Day Observed—Pinegroes Visited at Boothbay Harbor.

The senior boys went to Long Pond, West Denmark, Monday night for a corn and marshmallow toast. Wednesday the juniors went lunching at Wood's Pond. The O. E. S. held a special dance, Tuesday evening at I. O. O. F. Hall. Music was by Jordan's orchestra of Fryeburg. A baked bean supper, sandwiches, coffee, hot dogs, tonic and ice cream were on sale at tables on the lawn all through the evening. An elimination dance, Esther Wood receiving the box of candy, favors, and special decorations were features. Sunday was children's Day at church. The program was as follows:

Processional of School Children. Responsive Reading. Prayer. "Father We Thank Thee." School Song. "All the Stories of Jesus." School Play. "Sally's Riddle." Rev. Whitehead. "Blessed are They." Rev. Whitehead. "The Way to the City." Juniors. "The Juniors and Intermediates." Announcements. For the Beauty of the Earth. School Offering. "God Be With Us." All.

In the evening Stanley R. Hopper from California, was the speaker. He was Whitehead's communitate at college, where Mr. Hopper delivered the valedictory address before ten thousand people. He was indeed very fine. Beth Ogden sang solo and Hazel Ingalls was song leader. Next Sunday will be the last service this summer. Will everyone come and make it one of the best?

Mr. and Mrs. Warren Lee motored down from Massachusetts and Warren, their son, returned home with them after having spent the summer with his cousin, Wellington Lee.

Mr. and Mrs. Myron Trumbull are visiting at George Trumbull's.

Irving Trumbull and Little Mary spent the week end in Massachusetts.

ADMINISTRATOR'S NOTICE OF SALE OF REAL ESTATE State of Maine, Oxford, ss.

United Parish Kiwanis Boys' Camp

The boy who was not a member of the Saco Valley United Parish and Fryeburg-Lovell Kiwanis Boys' Camp this summer, missed an experience—of course he did! An experience of what? That's the story. The week end was wet. Monday, August 18, was decidedly damp, but with blankets, tents, grub and optimism, the boys headed northwards to the end of the road to the old Carlton House, and here of camp was made. It was wet, so nobody dared sleep on the ground and so the fellows bunked wherever they could. Some rolled up on the attic floor, right under a wasp's nest; the hay in the barn was dried six or eight, and the rest—oh, fellows—slept on the beds in the house. But nobody sleeps the first night in camp, this is so what difference where they lay their blankets?

The old Carlton House, the "Harsh" age", is on the Basin Brook, in the shadow of the Boyes, Spotted and Black Mountain. We came here to learn the hills, and so next morning we started to find our mountain legs by climbing Spotted, an easy climb. Some of the boys, and some were weary, but all of them to the top and did the vaulting. The old Stonehouse, but the middle group, longed for home and took the short path, but missed the fun of a spirited round trip.

You ought to see our swimming hole. Not now, alas! By nature it was a couple of feet deep, but last summer and business like. Myra, Ethel, and Healdson and Sherwood, with the help of all of the boys, dug out a hole with sandbags and made a swimming hole. Here we swam, and then breakfast. Mr. Payson, who was in charge, and some at night. The boys, in the darkness, managed to keep the mid-rib against a rock. All would have been well but for the heavy rain. The mountain torrents washed these sandbags and the water was back to its original depth. But Mr. Washburn gave us permission to use the hole. As the Cold River and here we had lots of fun. Have you had enough of a couple of dozen lads in camp on a wet day? On five days we had water, but Wednesday was wet—very wet. We'd have been miserable critters—no almost said "tough" if we had allowed a few drops of rain to spoil the camp. So we dug up a pole in the barn and had great excitement with pillow-fighting. Then there was tilting from the top of barrels. But the game that saved the day was "duck on a rock" with the boys and an old iron kettle.

Pages could be written on the trip to Mount Boyes. Here was a real mountain. Archie Hurd knew the trails and the stories and the best swimming holes, and with him as a guide we had a wonderful trip. The sun was shining, the blueberries were dead ripe and the water had a lovely nip, just the temperature for a hot day. If you have not climbed Boyes, take a day off and do it. It is Mr. Holford was booked for Friday, but the lads were tired, and so we put it off till Saturday, making a trip to Kimball Pond for a swim in water without a shower. Alas for the plans of nice and men! The day opened with clouds over the mountain tops, and so we explored Shell Pond and wandered up the back of the Stone House instead. Of course we got wet, even before the rain, but we were soaked before we reached camp for supper. However, we should worry!

The camp was run on a self-governing basis, everybody working together and sharing responsibility. The senior boys were elected leaders of the four groups into which the camp was divided, and these groups got the meals and did camp duties. Of course we had camp fires. Big blazing piles around which we gathered at night for sing-songs, story telling and intimate talks together, always finishing with a goodnight prayer and the impressive "taps" take had a great talk from Mr. Jones, the superintendent of the Home for Little Wanderers, Boston, who told us of the experience of hundreds of less fortunate lads from the cities and country places of New England. If it was too wet for a fire outside, we crowded into the kitchen for singing and generally had better ideas. The boys were very busy, and the camp was a success. On the last day the campers by vote chose the names for the Hall of Fame as follows:

Best All-Round Camper—Senior, James Merrill Junior, Willie Gupthill.
Most Respected Junior—Nelson Hall and Linwood Shaw.
Most Popular Boy—Byron Demis.
Best All-Round Athlete—Phil Holsdon.
Best Athlete, Junior—Amie Filson.
Best Athlete, Junior—Phil Holsdon.
Best Table Manner—Lawrence Binford.
Best Day, Byron Demis.
Junior Who Did Most for Camp—Amie Filson.
Most Courteous Boy—Tom Sherbourne, Byron Demis.
Neatest Boy—Willie Gupthill.
Best Built Boy—Phil Holsdon.
Favorite Game—Volley Ball.
Quietest Boy—Ben Day.
Camp Humorous—Gerard Groda.
Most Generous Boy—Eight boys received equal vote.
Favorite Trip—Mount Boyes.
Most Improved Boy—Van Holsdon.
Most Sportsmanlike Boy—Phil Holsdon and Byron Demis.
Strongest Boy—Phil Holsdon.
Favorite Camp Activity—Playing the Organ.
Best Singer—Linwood Shaw.

The following are the boys who attended the camp: Leroy, Tom Sherbourne, Edward Bell, Fryeburg, Wallace Jones, James Merrill, Francis Skillings, Fryeburg Harbor, Melvin Eastman, Royce McKen, Willie Gupthill, Sherwood, Demis, North Fryeburg, Amie Filson, Linwood Shaw, Lawrence Binford, Everett Forest, Byron Demis, West Fryeburg, Ralph McKen, Myron Gilman, Will Heath, Violet Hill, Phil Van and Irvin Holsdon, Stow, Donald Eastman, Ben Day, South Chatham, Nelson Hall.

We were glad to welcome visitors who dropped in. Mr. and Mrs. Ezra Bosworth, Mr. and Mrs. Jones of Boston, the parents of many of the boys, and some members of the A. M. C. The boys appreciate the kindness of Mrs. Etta Chandler for permission to use her expert help as guide to Burt Webb, for help in transportation; to the storekeepers for reduced prices on the grub; and especially to the Fryeburg-Lovell Club, without whose financial help it would have been impossible for some of the boys to have had the week in camp.
